

Island Peak Climbing and Everest Marathon

Trip Overview

Do you have the enthusiasm and will to embark on two experiences that push the boundaries of human endurance and exhilaration?

If yes, let us present you with one of the most adventurous and thrilling adventures that will test your determination.

Island Peak, also known as Imja Tse, is a towering mountain of 6,189 meters (20,305 feet). Island Peak Trek is recognized as the climber's playground. But you might wonder why it was named Island Peak. You would be surprised to know that an English mountaineer named Eric Shipton gave this name to Imja Tse in 1953 because he thought that this mountain resembled an island in a sea of ice. Later, it was named Imja Tse after Tenzing Norway Sherpa submitted this peak.

The allure of this peak is not only about the summit but also about the journey to get there. Along your way, you can explore the Khumbu Valley, Sherpa villages, rhododendron forests, and several glacial moraines.

Imagine running at the foot of the world's highest peak. The Everest Marathon is not just a race but also a test of physical and mental fortitude, which starts in Namche Bazar. The total distance for the Everest Marathon is 42.15 kilometers, which passes through the Khumbu Valley and culminates at Tengboche Monastery. This marathon, in the beginning, started to celebrate the success of the Everest summit on May 29, 1953, by the legends Tenzing Norgay Sherpa and Sir Edmund Hillary. Every year on May 29th, the Everest Marathon is conducted.

Island Peak Climbing and the Everest Marathon are designed for extreme adventure lovers. If you are one of them, grab this opportunity. Although it is open to participants with no or minimum experience, you need to remain physically fit and active as it demands strength.
